Aleksei Gorinov was sentenced to six years and 11 months of imprisonment for public dissemination of “knowingly false information” about the Russian armed forces and afterwards to three years of imprisonment for “public justification of terrorism”. The Memorial “Support for Political Prisoners” programme recognised him as a political prisoner. While serving a sentence in the penal colony, Gorinov was immediately put in a solitary confinement cell, where he was deprived of medical treatment despite being previously diagnosed with symptoms of tuberculosis. That punishment was automatically extended several times for far-fetched reasons, such as “not holding hands behind back” and “placing glasses and letters on the bedside table”. Valizer, as the head of the penal colony, is responsible for that facility’s policy towards Gorinov.

According to witnesses’ testimonies, he lost approximately 10 kilograms and looked like “a skeleton”. Other sources stated that Kushnir was beaten in custody by his fellow inmates. The Memorial “Support for Political Prisoners” programme recognised him as a political prisoner. While serving his sentence in the penal colony, Kriger was repeatedly put in a solitary confinement in harsh conditions for allegedly being threatened by other inmates. However, according to human rights defenders and Kriger, it was a far-fetched reason and the isolation was motivated by the political nature of his case. Kriger was put in solitary confinement for a period of 90 days and was not allowed to have visits from relatives or to receive letters from outside the penal colony.
